The Denver Republican is to be admired for the ingenuity of its editor in puts words into the mouth of the GAZETTE which not only it did not utter but which it had before disclaimed. When the Republican was corrected its editor claimed a conversion. Of course it is useless to answer such writing. As we seem to have been the means of giving the Republican the sweet assurance that it has converted somebody to something we will rest in this unique position.

While the tariff question is up for discussion, our cattlemen ought to take a hand. For the past two years the cattlemen have lost far more than the sheepmen. The cattle industry has more than ten times the capital invested than the sheep industry has. For the fiscal year ending June 30th, 1877, the value of the imported raw wool was $10,351,370, and of hides and skins $24,225,776. If there was a duty on hides and skins, so that our cattlemen could raise the price of hides a third, the business would pay much better. The cattlemen are entitled to this protection under our present system.

The common council of Atlanta Georgia, has recently passed a very stringent high license law. It fixes the tax at $1500 per annum to be paid in advance quarterly. In addition to this the wholesale or gallon [illegible] have been revoked and the whole [illegible] have not complied will be given satisfactory rebates. The bill leaves it optional with the mayor and council whether any license shall be granted at all within certain limits of the city. Every person who applies for a license will have to prove him self to be of good character, sobriety and discretion. He will also have to file with the [illegible] a written application of his place, with the affidavits of two good citizens as to his fitness to be trusted with a license. His bond for $1,000 will have to be signed by two property holders who are not interested in the application, and no person can be security on more than one bond at a time. Licenses will not be granted to [illegible] places. The saloon must be kept open and not obstructed by screens, blinds or painted glass, so that the public can see at any time who patronize it. No saloon can be kept in a basement. No gambling, cards, pool, billiards or [illegible] will be allowed in the saloon. If a drunken person be found in a saloon its license will be revoked. He cannot open earlier than 5 a. m. or close later than 12 p. m. Liquor must not be sold on Sundays, holidays, or on any days which the mayor may designate. Every saloon keeper will have to put out the following sign: "Licensed Retailer of Spirituous Liquors." If any person is convicted of drunkenness on the streets, his name and address will be furnished to every licensed liquor dealer, and any one selling him liquor again will have his license revoked at once. Any saloon keeper convicted of violating this bill will also have his license revoked.

The above is the summary of a new liquor law, [illegible] by what was thought to be the liquor element of Atlanta. From this it would appear that the fight was not between prohibition and the saloon but prohibition and temperance. The latter won and has enacted a law which is likely to do more to lessen the evils of intemperance than any measure yet tried. The experiment in Atlanta will be watched with interest. If successful, prohibitionists, high license men and lovers of good order should all unite to have such an ordinance passed in every large city in the country.

How A [illegible] Feeds England.

The Saturday Review.

The new number of "The Journal of the Royal Agricultural Society" contains an article on "Twenty Years' Changes in our Foreign Meat Supplies" [illegible] Agriculturists. During the last twenty years the population of the United Kingdom has increased about six million souls. In other words we have added to our numbers a population larger even and richly than the whole population of Ireland, or about one and a half times the population of Scotland. Further the [illegible] United Kingdom has greatly increased, and with the increase of wealth there has been a decided advance in the standard of living of the people. Major Craigie, the author of the article, estimates that the consumption of meat per head of the population has increased nearly 10 per cent. There has thus been an increase in our numbers of about one fifth, and a very considerable increase at the same time in the consuming power of the increased population, and yet it is a striking fact that the home production of meat has remained almost stationary. Major Craigie's estimate is that in 1847 the production was about 26,000,000 cwts., and now it is only 24,000,000 cwts. There is thus an increase of barely 6 cwts. cwts. or slightly more than 2½ per cent.

For every five persons living in the United Kingdom twenty years ago there are now six, and the six are better off than the five were then and consume more meat upon an average. The supply has obtained from abroad it will appear from the figures now given, the whole of the meat consumed by four, and the other five have practically also obtained from abroad the consumption [illegible] as much of what it was twenty years ago. It will be shown all the more clearly if we compare the importations with the population. Had the whole of the imports of meat, and living animals reduced to meat, been divided equally among the population twenty years ago they would have given each individual 94 pounds in the year, if the same distribution were to be made now, each individual would help himself to 29[illegible] pounds in the year, the increase of consumption [illegible] population the rate per head of the [illegible] of imported meat has been multiplied not far short of three and a half times. If we measure it both parties we find that the answer is the same, somewhat the same in kind, more than half the increase of meat consumed has been derived from abroad. Perhaps the most interesting part of Major Craigie's paper is that in which he compares the sources of American home supply to consider its ultimately supply is within or [illegible] be said that we cannot look for very large supplies. All the European nations have been growing in wealth, with the growth of wealth the standard of living has been rising, and consequently there is a larger consumption of meat than there was formerly. For instance, France, which at one time was an exporter of meat, is now a large importer, and practically it may be said that only three European countries are large exporters, Germany, Austria, Hungary and Denmark. The result, as stated above, is that the United States have beaten the continental nations in the export trade in meat, and that it is now mainly from the United States that we obtain our supplies. Recently there has been a considerable development of the trade in frozen meat from Australasia and South America. Major Craigie [illegible] to speculate as to whether this trade is destined to increase very largely. He considers that it is [illegible] that the [illegible] will be able to compete with the United States and Canada for the large population of the United Kingdom, and that we shall not very many years pass away before the British farmer is relieved from the keen competition of American cattle and of meat. However this is [illegible] with the capabilities of which the American population is growing. At the beginning of the century it was said to be [illegible] that the United States could [illegible] sixty millions, [illegible] hundred millions, and at a comparatively few years ago it was asserted that it would be impossible to support as many as [illegible] millions. But not only is the population of the United States growing at a rate without parallel, but [illegible] is the world. Europe, the British Islands will never [illegible] it will have to [illegible] the whole of the [illegible] supply. The other [illegible] only have [illegible] to extract the [illegible] from the West. Stimulated by the [illegible] and by the [illegible] which Major Craigie [illegible] the United States continues to grow as rapidly as it has [illegible] though this country, it will [illegible] [illegible] it should [illegible] will [illegible] for the [illegible] of the whole of the [illegible] supply for the [illegible] America [illegible] will [illegible] the British farmer [illegible] be [illegible] [illegible] of meat.
